Ed Kranepool

Bronx-born Ed Kranepool moved from James Monroe High School in the Bronx to the New York Mets. One of the original 1962 Mets, the left-handed first baseman spent all of his 18 years in baseball with the same team. He flourished as a pinch hitter late in his career, batting a major league-record .486 in 1974 (with a league-leading 17 pinch hits) and hit .396 as a pinch hitter from 1974-78. A 1965 All Star and a member of the 1969 World Championship team, Kranepool retired as the all-time club leader in eight offensive categories.

Cito Gaston

Cito Gaston had a very respectable 11-year major league career as an outfielder, spending six seasons with the San Diego Padres before playing for the Braves and Pirates. An All Star in 1970, he hit .318 with 186 hits with the Padres, earning top 10 placements in batting average, slugging percentage, hits, total bases, triples and extra base hits. It was as a manager, however, that Gaston may best be remembered. From 1989 to 1997 he managed the Toronto Blue Jays, leading them to back-to-back World Series victories in 1992 and 1993 – a feat that has yet to be equaled by any team north of the border.

Stan Bahnsen

Stan Bahnsen ("The Bahnsen Burner") was named American League Rookie of the Year as a Yankee in 1968, when he won 17 games with a 2.06 ERA. With a record 19 lifetime victories against the Yankees biggest American League rival, Bahnsen was known as a Red Sox killer. He won 21 games with the Chicago White Sox in 1972 and has a total of 146 lifetime victories. Bahnsen pitched for division-winning teams while with the A's and Expos and is ranked 11th on the Yankees' all-time ERA leaders list. He averaged 15 wins as a starting pitcher for nine years before becoming a setup-man for Oakland and Montreal for the last six years of his career.
